

Our colleague, Enrique Garcia has participated in an event of the University-Business Forum of the European Commission. A forum is held every year where experts gathered to give their views and views of how to foster innovative capabilities in business from the University. That is, how to transfer innovation from university to business and vice versa.

The forum deals with strategic issues, but formed small groups of experts, "operational arms" that try to summarize the issues specific strategies. One such issue was the innovativeness of enterprises, and in relation to it were invited to participate in Florida has been developing the project BINNOC (<http://www.binnoc.net/>) within the Erasmus Line, a project Collaboration University - Business.

Enrique Garcia and the hotel manager Gile in Vilnius, Lithuania (as a company that has participated in the project) attended the meeting, which were invited about 40 people across Europe.

Throughout the day's work was a process of reflection so that, with input from and present instruments can be incorporated in the policies of the future European programs that promote the transfer of knowledge in both directions.
